Streatham Theatre Company presents

Peter and the Wolf

a pantomime of old Russia by Richard Lloyd with apologies to Sergei Prokofiev

An inventive and irreverent panto based on Prokofiev's Peter and The Wolf. A madcap dash through the spectrum of Russian folklore... Firebirds, ice queens, shape-shifters, wood devils, mad monks, nesting dolls, Cossacks, Bolsheviks, Prokofiev - it's got the lot.

Peter Pyotrovich lives an idyllic life with his Grandma (Panto Dame Masha Pyotrovich), and his friends Molotov the Duck, and Mishka the Cat - his only troubles consist of having to fend off the unwanted attentions of gorgeous mixxes like Princess Ekaterina Jetski.

Suddenly however, all that changes, with the arrival of a fearsome wolf in the neighbourhood, and the strange disappearance of Peter's adorable sweetheart, Dasha Letrov.

Is the wolf responsible - or could it be the wicked Duchess Irina Bogovski and her evil cossack henchmen, led by the huge and hairy Ivan Arstikov? What exactly is the Grand Duchess of Depravia up to, as she communes with the fearsome wood demon, Kalashnikov? And who is the mysterious Kolyinka, Prince of Wolves? Peter sets out to find out, variously aided, abetted, and obstructed by a succession of weird and wonderful characters, such as Disputin, the mad monk, Young Solyerko, the overzealous zealot, and Captain The Count Yuri Pavel Smirnoff, of the Tsar's Imperial Guard!

A traditional pantomime with a non-traditional story and date!
Proceeds will support the work of The British Home and Streatham Theatre Company

Challenge of the Week!

These are furble clubs. They act a bit like Venn diagrams. Furbles can only fit into a club that is the same colour, has the same number of eyes or the same number of sides. Can you find suitable places for each furble?

How many can fit in each region?
